WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

*** Isolated Afternoon/Evening Thunderstorms Northern Areas Again Today ***

*** Gusty westerly winds in The Delta region next few days ***

A low pressure trough will be over the Northern California region again today for what should be the coolest day of the next week. There is a chance for more isolated afternoon and evening thunderstorms across the northern counties again today that are likely to be a mix of the wet to relatively dry variety. Higher pressure will return to the region starting Wednesday and gradually get stronger to bring in warmer temperatures. There is some chance a small weather system will arrive from off the Pacific Friday that could stir up a better chance of isolated afternoon and evening and mostly wet thunderstorms across the northern and eastern mountains, otherwise conditions will be dry across the Northern California region for the next 7 days. Early next week appears somewhat cooler with more seasonable temperatures again as another, larger-but-not-terribly-strong trough moves over the Pacific NW and Northern California.

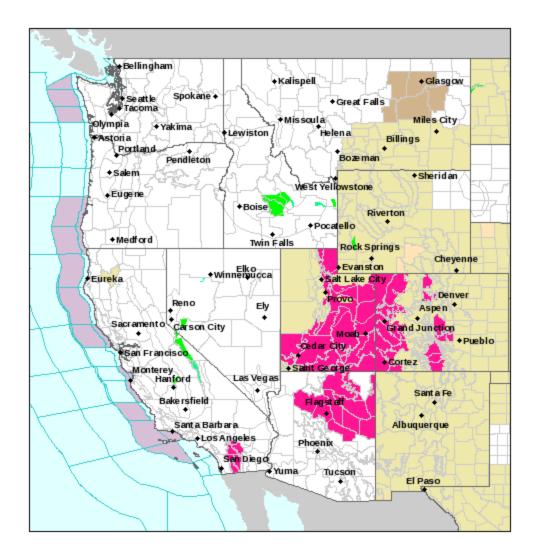

Outside of some gusty winds in The Delta region through at least Thursday with 20-30 mph gusts reasonably common in the favored areas, no significant winds are expected across the Northern California region this week. Some relatively light northerly winds may develop late this weekend. The warmest inland areas are expected to range from 100-105 through the weekend with some chance of a bit of cooling Friday if that low actually moves into the region. In general, afternoon highs will be 5-10 degrees above normal in the warmest areas.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

***Breezy in and near the desert today and Wednesday***

Strengthening onshore pressure gradients will generate breezy conditions in and near the desert areas this afternoon and again Wednesday. Expect winds of 20-30 mph in the desert interface regions such as the Kern County Mountains and the Antelope Valley. Some gusts to 45 mph will be possible toward evening through the Banning Pass and the eastern side of the Cleveland National Forest. Minimum RH in these areas will hover around 10% with poor recovery tonight. Wednesday, similar wind speeds can be expected with the strongest winds shifting toward the Kern County Mountains. It will also be breezy along the central coast during the afternoon hours today and Wednesday where northwest winds of 10-20 mph will be possible during the afternoon. A cooling trend is expected over the next 3 days across some of the inland valleys and lower foothills with temperatures sliding 2-4 degrees each day. By Thursday, highs will range from the upper 80s to lower 90s in the valleys to 108 in the desert. Onshore flow is expected to weaken Friday, allowing temperatures to warm back into the mid and upper 90s in the valleys. This weekend, expect sunny skies with temperature 5-8 degrees above normal with light winds. No convection is expected through the period.
